USER GUIDE

Welcome to this ninth edition of The Sports Forecaster's online fantasy baseball special, the only draft-day package of facts, advice and tip sheets you need for your fantasy league. The following pages will provide a heads-up view of what to expect in the MLB in 2013, both team-wise and player-wise. A few pointers to keep in mind:

The Forecasts

Each player was analyzed separately, keeping in mind his skills, his position in the depth chart, his teammates, his health history and all other factors (contract disputes, suspensions, law problems, etc) that could affect his performance in the 2012 season. Predicting a player's statistical forecast is not a perfect science; there is no magic formula that will guarantee the outcome of a season. Add in the inevitable injuries, training-camp performances, feuds with managers/coaching staff, etc., and the job becomes that much harder. However, do use the player forecasts as a tool to help you make better picks. The first few rounds in a draft are usually easy enough. Go with the best player available. But once the fifth or sixth round begins, here's your tool to help make your selections. And remember, the difference between a .300 and .260 hitter over the course of a season is only ONE more hit per week!

The Forecaster Value (FV)

Forecaster Values are based on a scale of 99 (70 being the league average). It's important to keep in mind that they were awarded strictly on a fantasy basis. It's also important to note that the values were attributed by position—all the hitters mixed together, the starting pitchers and the relief pitchers—meaning that the top players at those positions have a Value of 99. In order to come up with the Forecaster Value, we've taken into account—although at variable degrees—several statistical factors which are usually highly rewarded (or not) in fantasy leagues, most notably: runs, total bases, RBI, walks, strikeouts and stolen bases for hitters and innings pitched, wins, losses, saves, hits allowed, walks, strikeouts and ERA for pitchers.

The Grades

Grades from the projected lineup within the team-by-team previews are derived from both past performance and future projections. All grades are 100 per cent stats based. They run from A+ to F. The league average is always C+. The grades don't necessarily follow an exact percentage curve but the categories were split into nine groups, which are not always equal. To be graded in certain categories, a player must have played a minimum number of games, received a certain number of at-bats or logged enough innings. If the minimum numbers were not reached, or in cases of insufficient data to grade the player, a hyphen (-) is used in its place.

On Base Percentage

A player with a good OBP will give you points in numerous stat categories. All in all, on-base percentage is a more powerful stat than batting average or slugging percentage. Basic baseball: getting on base and not recording an out.

Power

If you subtract batting average from slugging percentage, you get a better result of a batter's power potential (i.e.: subtracting singles from the slugging percentage). You might come across a 40-homer player with a grade lower than a 30-homer player, because this rating is not about the number of home runs but rather the average number of times a player doesn't stop at first base when he puts the ball in play. The stats line for a pitcher is along the same lines. You can take any hurler and make him toss the exact same 90 pitches to the same batting lineup (assuming the batters would swing the exact same way every time), but in different parks or with different teammates, and you will never get the same result twice. There are two exceptions to this rule: walks and strikeouts. If you push the analysis a little further, K/9IP (strikeouts per nine innings) is the only percentage for which the pitcher is 100 per cent responsible. We used the K/9IP stats to grade pitchers under the power category; it's not about throwing fireballs, but rather about the pitchers who are successful in making batters return to the dugout with their bats still in their hands.

Be sure to click on player names in each team's projected lineup, as well as in the Tip Sheets (p. 60-81), for The Sports Forecaster's in-depth online bios and stats.

Steals

Steal, steal, steal... it's as simple as that. The grade is not about general speed (triples, fielding range), and it's not about having a good stolen-base percentage either. Many fantasy leaguers don't pay attention to speedsters because they don't collect as many points in other categories. However in most leagues, 40 stolen bases is worth as much as 40 home runs! If at some point during the draft you hesitate between two players, don't forget to check his steals grade.

Consistency

Relief pitchers can make a huge impact on your fantasy team, despite only logging a few innings every second or third day. A bad outing is a lot worse for your ERA and WHIP than one inning without giving up a run. Similar to the quality start for the starting pitchers, a reliever is given one quality outing when, in any amount of innings pitched in relief, no runs were earned and less than 20 per cent of batters faced reached base.

Stamina

The stamina grade is self-explanatory. The IP/GS (innings pitched per games started) statistic was used to measure stamina for starting pitchers. Some fantasy leagues prefer not to give any points for innings pitched, especially in leagues that adopt an unlimited number of roster moves during the season. Others think the number of innings pitched has nothing to do with performance.

Control

Pitchers who stay ahead of hitters (in the count) are usually more successful. We would have to analyze every at-bat to know exactly how often a pitcher is ahead or not ahead in the count, but the K/BB (strikeouts to walks) ratio gives us a pretty good idea of a pitcher's control.

Position eligibility: based on a minimum of 15 games played at that position in 2012. Best is always to verify with your league commish as to the requirements in this category.

See abbreviations on page 91.

Note: All ages are as of April 1, 2013.

THE ULTIMATE GUIDE FOR DRAFT-DAY DOMINANCE

THE EDGE

Posey

Fantasy factors & fiction

Knowing who the most valuable players are is obviously the key to winning in fantasy baseball, but how exactly do we know from year to year? Keeping up on signings is key, but tracking trends can be equally helpful. So which type of players should you target in '13, and which should you avoid? Get the Edge, with our overview...

Skew to hitters early

Depending on the era, either pitchers or hitters seem to find a way (as a group) to get an upper hand on the other. A decade ago the hitters had it, as Barry Bonds, Mark McGwire, Sammy Sosa and others smashed batting records. In more recent years the edge has shifted somewhat to pitchers. To wit: five years ago (2008), the average MLB hitter had an OPS of .749. Last season, it was .724. So what does that mean for your fantasy strategy? Simply that there are fewer elite hitters than elite pitchers these days, so target the hitters earlier in your draft.

Be careful with closers

Having quality closers on a fantasy team is a key to winning, but the role has become increasingly volatile on most MLB squads. Indeed, more than half of the 30 teams in the majors are projected to have a different closer to begin 2013 than they had in 2012. So clearly, drafting a closer early on can be a big mistake (especially since it often means passing on a much-needed elite hitter). Wait until the middle rounds, and then wait for sleepers to emerge throughout the season.

'Catch' you later!

Wait on drafting a catcher. Much like closers in pitching, catchers in hitting can be very hard to depend on—even the ones who are supposed to be elite. Last season, not a single catcher reached 550 at-bats, and not one hit either 30 home runs or drove in 100 runs. Moreover, while having a great-hitting backstop such as Joe Mauer or Buster Posey can be a real fantasy advantage, both those MVPs have extensive injury histories (which often goes hand in hand with the position).

Beware the all-or-nothing slugger

There was a time in fantasy baseball when focusing on home run hitters was a solid tactic. The homers would also usually bring RBI's, runs and sometimes good batting averages. In recent years, however, several batters have become much more one-dimensional. In fact, of the 27 MLB players who hit 30 or more homers in 2012, just 12 also reached the 100-RBI mark. In sharp contrast, 11 years ago (2002), 23 of the 28 guys who hit 30 or more dingers had at least 100 runs batted in. More proof: last season, five of MLB's top 10 home run hitters didn't even register 150 hits: Curtis Granderson, Adam Dunn, Giancarlo Stanton, Josh Willingham and Jay Bruce.

Remember veteran imports

In 2012, fantasy owners who knew about veteran international free agents such as Yu Darvish and Yoenis Cespedes reaped the benefits by snapping them up early. This year's international free agents aren't quite as highly regarded, but a few are worth considering in the middle rounds of fantasy drafts: Hiroyuki Nakajima, SS, Athletics. At 30, Nakajima is an experienced ballplayer who owns a nice mix of speed, power and patience. Hyun-Jin Ryu, SP, Dodgers. Dominant in South Korea, lefty Ryu is expected to be in the starter mix for the Dodgers in 2013. Kyuji Fujikawa, RP, Cubs. An overpowering strikeout pitcher in Japan, the 32-year-old may be the Cubs' new closer before long.

Hamilton

Consider contract status

Anyone who drafted the usually-dependable Albert Pujols last season (after his big new deal with the Angels) experienced what a post-signing letdown is like, just as those who picked up Chase Headley can attest to how some players react in a major way to a contract year. So this season, be a bit wary of players such as Josh Hamilton and Zack Greinke (who just inked massive new contracts), and perhaps upgrade the likes of Jacoby Ellsbury and Justin Morneau (who may become free agents).

Welcome to the AL, Houston!

This season's move by the Houston Astros to the AL doesn't have major fantasy implications, but do keep it in mind. Not only will the Astros now have a designated hitter (so sluggers such as Brett Wallace and Chris Carter should see more playing time), but Houston pitchers probably get a minor downgrade (since the average AL hitter produced a .731 OPS last season, compared to .718 for NLers)..

Chisox lefty Chris Sale has exemplary command of the strike zone.

PITCHERS

A healthy arm is like gold in fantasy baseball

SHIFTING UP

Aroldis Chapman, SP, Reds. The dominant closer will go back to his preferred love, starting. He's just as valuable in the rotation.

Matt Harvey, SP, Mets. The Mets have a good one in Harvey, who looked poised beyond his years last season.

Kris Medlen, SP, Braves. As long as he can remain healthy, Medlen may continue to dominate the National League.

Mike Minor, SP, Braves. Minor accepted the Braves' challenge towards him last year and he's a better pitcher for it.

Wily Peralta, SP, Brewers. He only turns 24 in May, so the future is very bright for Peralta. He ought to wear shades.

Chris Sale, SP, White Sox. The White Sox finally decided last year that Sale is a starter, not a reliever. He should take off.

Jeff Samardzija, SP, Cubs. He was always talented, but Samardzija finally put it together last year. He is Jered Weaver-like.

Chris Tillman, SP, Orioles. There is competition for jobs in Baltimore's starting rotation but Tillman has one of the best arms.

Jordan Zimmermann, SP, Nationals. While teammates Strasburg and Gonzalez get most of the attention, Zimmermann is quite good.

BOUNCING BACK

Dillon Gee, SP, Mets. Before his shoulder problems, Gee was establishing himself as part of the Mets' pitching nucleus.

Tommy Hanson, SP, Angels. A loss of velocity was at the root of the problem but Hanson is only 26. He should rebound.

Wade Davis, SP, Royals. While caught in the numbers game in Tampa Bay, Davis should now be entrenched as a starter.

Josh Johnson, SP, Blue Jays. The Marlins' former ace should be plenty motivated to bounce back as he enters his walk year.

Jon Lester, SP, Red Sox. The likely ace of the Red Sox probably bottomed out with his 2012 performance (9-14, 4.82 ERA).

Tim Lincecum, SP, Giants. A 5.18 earned-run average in 2012 was probably an aberration for the two-time Cy Young winner.

Cory Luebke, SP, Padres. Arguably San Diego's most talented arm, Luebke's elbow woes need to be a thing of the past.

Ricky Romero, SP, Blue Jays. As long as he doesn't walk as many batters (105 in 181 IP in 2012), his talent will lead the way.

BUYER BEWARE

Bronson Arroyo, SP, Reds. In seven seasons in Cincinnati, Arroyo has surrendered more hits than innings pitched four times.

Chad Billingsley, SP, Dodgers. Opting against elbow surgery may merely prolong Billingsley's issues this season. He's a big risk.

Chris Carpenter, SP, Cardinals. While he

MUST HAVE

Verlander, Tigers
Hernandez, Mariners
Kershaw, Dodgers
Price, Rays
Kimbrel, Braves
Papelbon, Phillies
Hamels, Phillies
Strasburg, Nationals
Darvish, Rangers
Cain, Giants

hasn't decided to retire, Carpenter (shoulder) is a major long shot to pitch at all this season.

Ryan Dempster, SP, Red Sox. Veteran Dempster surrenders a lot of dingers, and now he must fend against the 'Green Monster'.

Frank Francisco, RP, Mets. A wonky elbow and the presence of Bobby Parnell make Francisco an extremely vulnerable closer.

Matt Garza, SP, Cubs. Injuries are a factor here, as well as the uncertainty of where Garza will be by the end of 2013.

Luke Hochevar, SP, Royals. The Royals opted to strengthen the rotation in part because of Hochevar's chronic underachievement.

Tim Hudson, SP, Braves. 'Huddy' has been great for Atlanta, but sooner or later his age and innings accumulation will factor in.

John Lackey, SP, Red Sox. Coming back from Tommy John surgery at age 34, Lackey hasn't pitched well since leaving Anaheim.

Brandon League, RP, Dodgers. The Dodgers have anointed League their closer but there are better options here (Kenley Jansen).

Ryan Madson, RP, Angels. A late start to 2013 may force Madson (elbow) to set up Ernesto Frieri—instead of the other way around.

Jason Marquis, SP, Padres. He's gutsy and can win games, but his other numbers won't even look good pitching at PETCO Park.

Ivan Nova, SP, Yankees. The Yankees' patience figures to wear thin here, as David Phelps could beat him out of the No. 5 job.

Johan Santana, SP, Mets. The Mets ace was quite good for stretches last season, but his body appears to be breaking down.

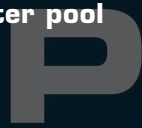

Huston Street, SP, Padres. Street is terrific but never fully healthy, plus the Padres have Luke Gregerson lurking in the weeds.

Barry Zito, SP, Giants. The crafty lefty had his best season since leaving Oakland in 2006, but he's 34 and inconsistent.

Samardzija

Two trends among pitchers in fantasy baseball to watch out for: dominant closers that convert to the starting rotation and Asian imports. Both affect the starter pool significantly...

TOP 5 BREAKOUTS

Wei-Yin Chen, SP, Orioles. After a solid first big-league campaign, look for Chen to take it to the next level.

Matt Moore, SP, Rays. With James Shields gone, Moore should move up Tampa Bay's pecking order.

Jonathon Niese, SP, Mets. With health concerns for Johan Santana and Dillon Gee, is Niese the Mets' ace?

Jarrod Parker, SP, Athletics. A healthy Parker should emerge as Oakland's ace right-hander this season.

Sergio Romo, RP, Giants. Brian Wilson is gone and there should be a plethora of save opportunities here.

Chen

LATER-ROUND GEMS

Carter Capps, RP, Mariners. Big right-hander could step in for Tom Wilhelmsen and wind up closing for Seattle this season.

Ryan Cook, RP, Athletics. The 25-year-old saved 14 games last season, and Grant Balfour is usually on shaky grounds.

Jason Grilli, RP, Pirates. After dealing Joel Hanrahan away, Grilli should finally get a shot at being a full-time closer.

Tom Layne, RP, Padres. While he has Huston Street and Luke Gregerson to contend with for saves, Layne is a talent.

Bobby Parnell, RP, Mets. The Mets figure to play a lot of one-run ball games in 2013, and Parnell should eventually close.

Glen Perkins, RP, Twins. Getting to the close is the problem in Minnesota, since Perkins usually shuts the door in the ninth.

Grilli

Detwiler

SLEEPERS

Ross Detwiler, SP, Nationals. Washington's No. 5 starter? He should get favorable match-ups in 2013.

Scott Diamond, SP, Twins. The Twins need solid lefty Diamond to become a stalwart for their rotation.

Ernesto Frieri, RP, Angels. Ryan Madson is hurting; this is Frieri's opportunity to run with the closer job.

Miguel Gonzalez, SP, Orioles. He emerged as a big-game pitcher last year. Buck Showalter loves him.

Hisashi Iwakuma, SP, Mariners. Seattle is moving the fences in but Iwakuma should come out of it unscathed.

Zach McAllister, SP, Indians. Indians pitching is often overlooked but McAllister has the goods to shine.

Vinnie Pestano, RP, Indians. Whenever the Tribe deal away Chris Perez, Pestano will close for them.

David Phelps, SP, Yankees. He may start or relieve for the Yanks, but figures prominently in 2013.

Hector Santiago, SP, White Sox. Though he failed as a closer, Santiago could shine as a screwball starter.

Joakim Soria, RP, Rangers. Once he's completely healthy, Soria should be a great addition here.

TOP ROOKIES

- Bruce Rondon, RP, Tigers. Detroit is a true AL contender so rookie Rondon should rack up the saves.
- Kyuji Fujikawa, RP, Cubs. The Cubs insist Carlos Marmol is still their closer. Don't believe it.
- Shelby Miller, SP, Cardinals. With Chris Carpenter likely done, it should be Miller time at Busch.
- Mark Rogers, SP, Brewers. A big-time prospect pre-injury, Rogers can still salvage his career.
- Cody Allen, RP, Indians. The Tribe have two righties for the late innings but Allen will challenge.
- Zack Wheeler, SP, Mets. It's only a matter of time before Wheeler joins Matt Harvey in Queens.
- Jarred Cosart, RP, Astros. Whether as a starter or reliever, Cosart should be a factor in 2013.

Rogers

Bryce Harper, last season's NL ROY, has impressive power upside.

HITTERS

Speed is back in a big way in fantasy baseball

SHIFTING UP

Dustin Ackley, 2B, Mariners. The Mariners have added power, so Ackley has more value now as a main catalyst.

Starlin Castro, SS, Cubs. Few shortstops can hit like Castro, and he's part of the growing core group in Chicago.

Yoenis Cespedes, LF, Athletics. His debut performance was spectacular and the Cuban should feel even more comfortable.

Ian Desmond, SS, Nationals. This Expos draft pick is slowly becoming an all-around stud who can do a bit of everything.

Freddie Freeman, 1B, Braves. His left-handed power is tremendous and Freeman now has a ton of support in the lineup.

Paul Goldschmidt, 1B, Diamondbacks. A rare talent, this 230-pounder missed joining the 20/20 club by two steals last season.

Bryce Harper, LF, Nationals. The much-ballyhooded outfielder won't have to patrol center field with Denard Span around.

Jason Heyward, RF, Braves. Heyward is now part of the most exciting outfield in baseball, along with the Upton brothers.

Austin Jackson, CF, Tigers. The strikeouts are coming down and the walks are going up. Next up: stealing more bases.

Jason Kipnis, 2B, Indians. While he batted leadoff and second a lot last year, Kipnis should be the No. 3 hitter of the future.

Manny Machado, 3B, Orioles. While he may switch back to shortstop eventually, he has the look of a classic third baseman.

Miguel Montero, C, Diamondbacks. Lefty-hitting RBI men are rare from the catching position: Arizona has an edge with Montero.

Will Middlebrooks, 3B, Red Sox. The 24-year-old needs to be more patient for sure, but his home-run power is real.

Salvador Perez, C, Royals. Injuries dented Perez' 2012 performance but he still hit .301 with 11 home runs in 289 at-bats.

Ben Revere, CF, Phillies. Miscast in right field with the Twins, Revere should thrive as a center-fielder in the National League.

Josh Rutledge, 2B, Rockies. There's competition at second base for the natural shortstop but Rutledge displays good power.

Andrelton Simmons, SS, Braves. Whether he leads off or not, lanky Simmons has a very bright future as a cornerstone infielder in Atlanta.

Giancarlo Stanton, RF, Marlins. Ticked off by Miami's most recent fire sale, Stanton will unleash his fury on National League pitchers.

Goldschmidt

MUST HAVE

Bautista, Blue Jays
Braun, Brewers
Cabrera, Tigers
Cano, Yankees
Fielder, Tigers
Gonzalez, Rockies
Longoria, Rays
Pujols, Angels
Trout, Angels
Upton, Braves

Mark Trumbo, DH, Angels. It must be nice to bat behind the likes of Mike Trout, Albert Pujols AND Josh Hamilton all the time.

Matt Wieters, C, Orioles. Switch-hitting catchers with Wieters' type of power and offensive ability are extremely rare in baseball.

BOUNCING BACK

Travis Hafner, DH, Yankees. While he may sit against most left-handers, Hafner could feast on Yankee Stadium's right-field porch.

Victor Martinez, DH, Tigers. The Tigers don't want to use him behind the plate anymore, so 'V-Mart' should remain healthy in 2013.

Justin Morneau, 1B, Twins. The big Canadian managed to stay healthy in 2012, setting up a big year before free agency in 2013.

Carlos Santana, C, Indians. This supremely talented switch-hitter should benefit from playing under Terry Francona this season.

Luke Scott, DH, Rays. The Rays lack power, which is Scott's forte. While he's not a great everyday player, he'll produce.

Kevin Youkilis, 3B, Yankees. A strange replacement for 'A-Rod' in the Bronx, Youkilis should win over fans pretty quickly this year.

BUYER BEWARE

Melky Cabrera, LF, Blue Jays. While he could be in a perfect spot (batting second), Cabrera's PED history should sound off alarms.

Torii Hunter, RF, Tigers. The veteran batted in arguably the best spot in baseball last year: between Mike Trout and Albert Pujols.

David Ortiz, DH, Red Sox. While 'Big Papi' appears to be healthy again, his Achilles may continue to be an issue moving forward.

Brian Roberts, 2B, Orioles. Injuries have limited Roberts to just 115 games the last three seasons. He comes with much risk.

With baseball's crackdown on performance-enhancing drugs trending these days, teams look for players who can do more than simply launch home runs. Offensive versatility is key...

Alex Rodriguez, 3B, Yankees. While he may return to action at some point this season, Rodriguez (hip surgery) was already in decline.
Drew Stubbs, RF, Indians. Perhaps a move across state from Cincinnati to Cleveland will help Stubbs reduce his ridiculous K rate.

LATER-ROUND GEMS

Erick Aybar, SS, Angels. If the switch-hitting shortstop is picked to bat second with the Angels this season, he will be a draft steal.
Michael Brantley, LF, Indians. The solid line-drive hitter moves to left field permanently with Michael Bourn around. He should steal more.
Everth Cabrera, SS, Padres. The NL's reigning stolen-base champ has holes in his game, but his speed is a constant weapon.
Tyler Flowers, C, White Sox. He has waited patiently for his shot so look for Flowers to do a good job replacing A.J. Pierzynski.
Brett Gardner, CF, Yankees. Whether the Yankees play him in center or left field, expect Gardner to be healthy and steal tons of bases.
Matt Joyce, LF, Rays. With prospect Wil Myers looming, Joyce should have a lot of motivation to put it all together offensively.
Jonathan Lucroy, C, Brewers. A quality hitter behind the plate, Lucroy may not lose as many at-bats to his backup this season.
David Murphy, LF, Rangers. The quintessential fourth outfielder should finally get his shot as an everyday left-fielder in 2013.

Brantley

TOP 5 BREAKOUTS

Eric Hosmer, 1B, Royals. He's too good to continue being average. Expect a massive bust-out campaign here.
Desmond Jennings, CF, Rays. With B.J. Upton gone, the Rays now need Jennings' speed to emerge in all facets.
Brett Lawrie, 3B, Blue Jays. With so much new talent around him, Lawrie can't miss becoming a star in Toronto.
Anthony Rizzo, 1B, Cubs. The Cubs' rebuild will be gradual; Rizzo's ascent in the National League won't be.
Wilin Rosario, C, Rockies. He emerged last season but may become Colorado's cleanup hitter this time around.

Rosario

SLEEPERS

Yonder Alonso, 1B, Padres. With PETCO Park becoming more hitter-friendly, Alonso should benefit greatly.
Norichika Aoki, RF, Brewers. He started last season as Milwaukee's fourth outfielder but forced Corey Hart to 1B.
Brandon Belt, 1B, Giants. He doesn't get as many at-bats as most 1B due to Buster Posey but he is emerging.
Chris Carter, LF, Astros. With Houston, he may be their top run producer and home-run threat this year.
Allen Craig, 1B, Cardinals. A quality RBI man, he seems to finally have a regular job at first base in St. Louis.
Todd Frazier, 3B, Reds. It appears Cincinnati is finally ready to give Frazier a position to call his own.
Mike Moustakas, 3B, Royals. He was once a can't-miss prospect but now flies somewhat under the radar.
Jean Segura, SS, Brewers. Acquired from the Angels last year, he is fast and can also be a solid hitter in the bigs.
Justin Smoak, 1B, Mariners. We're still waiting for the Smoak to clear but he continues to get opportunities.
Denard Span, CF, Nationals. The Nationals will ask Span to run more than he did in Minnesota. He's capable.

Craig

TOP ROOKIES

- Adam Eaton, CF, Diamondbacks. Arizona's new table-setter, he should be among the NL's steals leaders in '13.
- Hiroiyuki Nakajima, SS, Athletics. Perhaps a stopgap measure, Nakajima may surprise with his all-round skills.
- Wil Myers, OF, Rays. It's a matter of time before Myers begins assaulting American League pitching.
- Jurickson Profar, SS, Rangers. Arguably the top prospect in the game, he just needs an everyday opportunity.
- Travis d'Arnaud, C, Mets. The plan calls for John Buck to keep d'Arnaud's seat warm in the early going.
- Mike Olt, 1B, Rangers. Stuck at third (Adrian Beltre), Olt's best shot for quality at-bats is at first base.
- Avisail Garcia, LF, Tigers. The young Miguel Cabrera clone could platoon in left field to start off in 2013.

ARIZONA DIAMONDBACKS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

With Justin Upton now in Atlanta, will the offense dry up completely in the Desert? Diamondbacks GM Kevin Towers is counting on the opposite effect, hoping burgeoning talents such as Paul Goldschmidt, Miguel Montero and Adam Eaton step up.

PITCHING

Slowly, Arizona is becoming more of a pitching team than a hitting squad. There is strength in numbers in the rotation, led by right-handers Ian Kennedy and Trevor Cahill. Lefties Wade Miley and Patrick Corbin offer a different look, while newcomer Brandon McCarthy hopes he can rebound from a scary beaming while with Oakland. Rehabilitating Daniel Hudson and youngsters Randall Delgado and Tyler Skaggs provide impressive depth. The bullpen is solid, led by right-handers J.J. Putz and David Hernandez.

HITTING

Rookie Eaton finally gives Arizona a legitimate table-setter for the top of the order. He, along with the production of veteran newcomers Martin Prado and Cody Ross, will help make up for Upton's departure. That said, this lineup now lacks a true game-breaking threat in the middle of the order. That is why Goldschmidt and Montero are particularly important pieces in 2013.

X-FACTOR

The D'backs emphasized defense at the shortstop position in the off-season, bringing in rookie Didi Gregorius from Cincinnati in a deal that sent top prospect Trevor Bauer to Cleveland. This is further proof Arizona intends to win more with improved defense.

ATLANTA BRAVES

NATIONAL LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

The retirement of Chipper Jones opens a world of uncertainty at third base but otherwise the Braves are pretty well covered. The real question is whether Atlanta is any further ahead offensively with the Upton brothers in the lineup.

PITCHING

Tim Hudson stands to be most affected by the revamped defense. The glove work of a Juan Francisco/Chris Johnson platoon at third and novice shortstop Andrelton Simmons will be critical to Hudson and, to a lesser extent, the entire pitching staff. Projected starters Kris Medlen, Mike Minor, Brandon Beachy and Julio Teheran each lacks for something (whether it's experience or optimal health). Veteran lefty Paul Maholm comes off his best season. The NL's premier bullpen adds ex-Angels fireballer Jordan Walden to the setup mix for closer Craig Kimbrel.

HITTING

The brothers Upton, Justin Upton from Arizona and B.J. Upton from Tampa, are in their primes and the supporting cast is excellent. Right-fielder Jason Heyward should make a serious run at the NL MVP. First sacker Freddie Freeman, catcher Brian McCann and second baseman Dan Uggla can slug with anyone and it all starts with Simmons in the leadoff spot. That said, the Braves need to make better contact across the board and improve on last year's .247 team batting average.

X-FACTOR

For a playoff team the Braves have made a lot of changes. How effectively they integrate all the new faces is the defining issue for Atlanta.

BALTIMORE ORIOLES

AMERICAN LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

Is the shocker team of 2012 set to surprise again in 2013? Obviously Buck Showalter's charges won't be as overlooked this time around, so they need to be even better—especially in an AL East that's seen the Blue Jays improve dramatically.

PITCHING

Despite lacking star power the Orioles' pitching was the team strength in 2012. They led the league in saves (55) thanks to returning closer Jim Johnson, which was key since the top wins guy was starter Wei-Yin Chen (with just 12). It's not fair to expect a repeat from Johnson so Baltimore needs starters Jason Hammel, Chris Tillman, Miguel Gonzalez and others to step up (especially with talented Brian Matusz now in a relief role). Perhaps top prospect Dylan Bundy will help soon.

HITTING

Last season Baltimore's offense was actually mediocre, but it can be much improved. Outfielders Nick Markakis and Adam Jones get most of the attention, but the Orioles have an above-average offensive infield including power hitters at shortstop (J.J. Hardy) and first base (Chris Davis), plus potential stars in third baseman Manny Machado and catcher Matt Wieters. Vets Brian Roberts, Nate McLouth and Wilson Betemit round out the group.

X-FACTOR

Having such unproven starting pitching means cornerstone catcher Wieters, 26, must keep growing as a game-caller. The team also needs his middle-of-the-order bat to be more consistent for the O's to be seen as true contenders.

BOSTON RED SOX

AMERICAN LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

The shift from the Theo Epstein-Terry Francona regime to the Ben Cherington-Bobby Valentine pairing last season was disastrous. With Valentine now replaced by the more player-friendly John Farrell as manager, can the Sox get their mojo back in 2013?

PITCHING

With former ace Josh Beckett gone to the Dodgers in a multi-player deal last year, newcomer Ryan Dempster, 35, may assume staff leadership. Returnees Jon Lester and Clay Buchholz are both above-average and capable of bouncing back, while still-young lefties Felix Doubront and Franklin Morales have sleeper potential. If aging John Lackey can stay healthy this may be a solid group, and new closer Joel Hanrahan can certainly shut the door.

HITTING

With heart-of-the-order first baseman Adrian Gonzalez also gone, Boston now looks to sometimes-catcher Mike Napoli to replace him. They have speed at the top with outfielders Jacoby Ellsbury and Shane Victorino, and proven vet leaders in DH David Ortiz, second baseman Dustin Pedroia and outfielder Jonny Gomes. If lower-order guys Will Middlebrooks, Stephen Drew and Jarrod Saltalamacchia produce, Boston will score regularly.

X-FACTOR

At 29 Ellsbury is firmly in his prime, and when healthy he can be that rare catalyst who truly sets the tone. His only problem is he has been healthy in just two of the past four seasons. Having their table-setter stay on the field is vital for Boston.

CHICAGO CUBS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The Theo Epstein/Jed Hoyer Era enters Year 2 with no apparent sign of discontent amongst the Wrigley faithful. With Epstein providing PR cover, Hoyer can continue the painstaking task of rebuilding a barren farm system while ownership offers the carrot of a major stadium renovation. The 'winning' part is at least another year away. Keep the 'old style' coming and no one gets hurt.

PITCHING

The Jeff Samardzija experiment finally paid off last year. The converted Notre Dame football star became a bona fide major-league starter and enters 2013 as the staff ace. With no help coming from the farm, management went shopping for mid-level free agents Edwin Jackson, Carlos Villanueva and Scott Feldman. Travis Wood returns as the top lefty while ailing righty Matt Garza is the wild card and potential trade bait if healthy. Former Japanese all-star Kyuji Fujikawa will push Carlos Marmol for the closer's job—possibly right out of town.

HITTING

Alfonso Soriano had a remarkable year as the only bona fide RBI threat in the order last season. Anthony Rizzo and Starlin Castro will be the other key run producers. The rest of the lineup is a mixed bag of seasoned pros and seat-fillers, none of whom will be around when the playoff circus returns to Wrigleyville.

X-FACTOR

The Cubs will try to accelerate the rebuild via trades for Soriano and Marmol but otherwise will stay the course while recent high draft picks gestate in the minors.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX

AMERICAN LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

After coming close to the playoffs last season, have the White Sox done enough to take the next step? Manager Robin Ventura helped them improve, but he'll need to keep working his magic since very little has changed on the field.

PITCHING

Jake Peavy isn't the lights-out stud he once was but he is a quality ace, so if lefty Chris Sale continues his ascent as one of MLB's most dominant young starters and John Danks bounces back, they join the ever-solid Gavin Floyd as a strong top four. Converted reliever Hector Santiago (a screwballer) and fellow lefty Jose Quintana both have starter sleeper appeal, and young closer Addison Reed anchors a deep bullpen.

HITTING

Despite featuring several key hitters with big holes in their swings, the ChiSox were one of the AL's best run-producing teams in 2012. Core sluggers Alex Rios, Adam Dunn and Paul Konerko are joined by underrated journeyman infielder Jeff Keppinger early in the order, with speedy Alejandro de Aza again expected to lead off. The bottom of the order has pop (Dayan Viciedo, Alexei Ramirez and Gordon Beckham) but little patience.

X-FACTOR

Tyler Flowers won't likely replace A.J. Pierzynski's 27 homers at catcher (at least not this year), but he must try to replace his defense and game-calling. If Chicago is set to score less (which seems likely) they must give up fewer runs too, so much will hinge on Flowers' handling of the staff.

CINCINNATI REDS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The Reds can be as good as anyone in the NL. The move of Aroldis Chapman from the bullpen to the rotation could provide the game-changer that puts them over the top. A stacked batting order is set in stone and bad to the bone.

PITCHING

The boldest experiment in the majors this spring is attracting eyeballs from San Francisco to Atlanta. If Chapman and his triple-digit heater can make the transition to starting every fifth day then the Reds may be unstoppable. Everyone else in the rotation will be better and that's saying something given the quality and depth of last year's group. Johnny Cueto, Mat Latos, Bronson Arroyo and Homer Bailey all return. A deep bullpen anchored by Jonathan Broxton means the starters will be fresh for the stretch run.

HITTING

Exchanging Drew Stubbs for sweeter-swinging Shin-Soo Choo was a potential stroke of genius, no pun intended. Like Stubbs, the multi-skilled Choo is also known to strike out but he makes far better contact for the leadoff spot. Behind him, the lineup is stacked and built for success at Great American Ball Park, one of the friendliest in MLB for the long ball. It's a lineup that will wear opponents down and has few, if any, weaknesses.

X-FACTOR

Chapman is the lynchpin but don't overlook a full season's worth of third baseman Todd Frazier, a possible breakout by catcher Devin Mesoraco and the pending arrival of minor-league base-stealing phenom Billy Hamilton. Did we say they were stacked?

CLEVELAND INDIANS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The off-season addition of several proven bats should help Cleveland improve on last season's dismal offensive production. Yet, with their AL-worst pitching not nearly as improved, will the newfound slugging be enough to at least make the Tribe competitive?

PITCHING

The veteran trio of Justin Masterson, Ubaldo Jimenez and Brett Myers (now a starter again) is a solid start to any rotation, but after last season all three must prove they can still be above-average options. Underrated youngsters Zach McAllister and Corey Kluber are worth watching and should round out the quintet, while fire-balling, uber-prospect Trevor Bauer may push for starts if he can harness his immense talent. Good-but-erratic Chris Perez anchors the 'pen.

HITTING

Cleveland's run production seems bound to improve this season thanks to the arrival of leadoff hitter and steals king Michael Bourn, slugger Nick Swisher (who should play first base) and big-swinging masher Matt Reynolds. They (along with veteran infielder Mike Aviles) should take a lot of pressure off young cornerstones Carlos Santana, Jason Kipnis and Asdrubal Cabrera. Speedy outfielder Michael Brantley remains a nice sleeper for the Indians.

X-FACTOR

New manager Terry Francona is a proven winner and a coup for Cleveland, and he should pull enough levers to at least make this team harder to beat. Solving the pitching issues won't be easy however, so don't expect a Baltimore-type surprise.

COLORADO ROCKIES

NATIONAL LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

It was a Rocky Mountain low in 2012, as Colorado lost a franchise-worst 98 games to finish last in the NL West. Despite that fact, very few moves were made in the off-season...aside from the appointment of former Rockies shortstop Walt Weiss as the new manager.

PITCHING

This is a major problem area for Colorado. They have quantity (approximately 10 starting candidates for the rotation this spring), but lack quality. If Jhoulys Chacin doesn't emerge as the ace of the staff this year, the Rockies have no chance. Furthermore, Drew Pomeranz, Tyler Chatwood, Juan Nicasio and Christian Friedrich must also step up. Fortunately, the bullpen is sound with Rafael Betancourt closing the door in the ninth.

HITTING

X-FACTOR

Can Weiss get the most out of his 25-man roster? The Rockies do have plenty of interchangeable parts (Colvin, Young, Jordan Pacheco, Chris Nelson, Josh Rutledge, D.J. LeMahieu et al) in the field and on the bench, which should provide the new manager with plenty of options.

DETROIT TIGERS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The still-contending Tigers have more stars than most teams...but do they have what it takes to win a World Series? The rotation, batting order and bullpen have bright lights but also some question marks, so manager Jim Leyland must fill in the blanks.

PITCHING

All-world ace Justin Verlander ensures few (if any) long losing streaks, and the improving Max Scherzer may battle him for the AL strikeout title. Quality vet Anibal Sanchez is back and late bloomer Doug Fister will get his regular turn. Disappointing Rick Porcello and promising lefty Drew Smyly should compete for spot No. 5, while rookie flamethrower Bruce Rondon should have first dibs on closer duties in an otherwise veteran (if erratic) bullpen.

HITTING

Miguel Cabrera's historic 2012 Triple Crown makes him the obvious star, but he has strong company at the top of Detroit's order: an improving Austin Jackson leads off, classy vet Torii Hunter is likely in the 2-hole, slugging star Prince Fielder protects Cabrera, and venerable DH Victor Martinez returns from his knee injury. After Martinez things get less stellar, but Jhonny Peralta and Alex Avila are above-average hitters and Omar Infante is solid.

X-FACTOR

Big Rondon regularly throws over 100 m.p.h. and by all accounts has a closer's mentality, but he has yet to pitch in the majors. If he can't hold down the closer job, Detroit's pitching may be challenged early and often.

HOUSTON ASTROS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

Will the Astros take off by switching leagues? Not likely. Despite the big move to the junior circuit, most of the Astros' issues remain from last season. New manager Bo Porter needs supreme patience to get the job done (eventually). For now, Houston, we have problems.

PITCHING

The clear ace of the Astros staff is 28-year-old right-hander Bud Norris, but for how long? Norris was the subject of countless trade rumors in the off-season. GM Jeff Luhnow is committed to rebuilding the 'Stros his way, so Norris isn't likely to finish 2013 in Houston. The rest of the rotation and bullpen are a hodgepodge of castoffs, prospects, has-beens and never-weres. Jordan Lyles, Alex White, John Ely, Brad Peacock and Jarred Cosart offer hope.

HITTING

There is some upside here, especially if off-season acquisition Chris Carter pans out as a big home-run and RBI man. Second baseman Jose Altuve is the closest thing Houston has to a sure thing with the bat, but there are massive questions all over the lineup. If promising catcher Jason Castro can stay healthy, he'll be a huge help.

X-FACTOR

The good news for Astros fans is that help is on the way...especially on offense. Future star shortstop Carlos Correa, future leadoff man Delino DeShields jr., multi-tooled outfielder George Springer and first baseman Jonathan Singleton will all give the team a boost when they arrive. It's now up to Luhnow to rebuild the pitching staff.

KANSAS CITY ROYALS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

After years of being in seemingly constant rebuilding mode, the Royals now appear intent on finally 'going for it'. With a rebuilt starting pitching staff to go with their promising batting lineup, will KC be the surprise team of the AL Central?

PITCHING

In 2012 opponents bat .270 against them (13th in the 14-team AL), and this off-season GM Dayton Moore addressed that by acquiring three righty starters: ace James Shields, former Angel Ervin Santana and still-promising Wade Davis. Solid Jeremy Guthrie, erratic Luke Hochevar and journeyman Bruce Chen are around for depth, and the bullpen is stocked with great young arms (notably Greg Holland, lefty Tim Collins and righty Kelvin Herrera).

HITTING

The biggest price of Moore's bold off-season moves was sending top hitting prospect Wil Myers to the Rays, but the outfield is still solid with athletic center-fielder Lorenzo Cain, veteran right-fielder Jeff Francoeur and quality left-fielder Alex Gordon. The anchor here is cleanup DH Billy Butler, while young catcher Salvador Perez is a true talent. To move forward, however, the Royals need more from first baseman Eric Hosmer, third baseman Mike Moustakas and Johnny Giavotella at second base.

X-FACTOR

A healthy Salvador Perez will be key to the batting order improving, and the talented backstop also must handle the new-look starting staff, so he's clearly the one to watch for KC.

LOS ANGELES ANGELS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

How heavenly is a lineup that features Mike Trout, Albert Pujols AND Josh Hamilton? It could be argued that no team in MLB can now say they boast more viable MVP candidates than the Angels. Is that enough to bring a second World Series title to Anaheim?

PITCHING

Ace Jered Weaver will be hard-pressed to repeat his 20-5 record of 2012, but at least the Angels appear to have a stable rotation from 1-5: Weaver, C.J. Wilson, Tommy Hanson, Jason Vargas and Joe Blanton. The latter three were acquired in the off-season from Atlanta, Seattle and free agency, respectively. The bullpen should be solid if new projected closer Ryan Madson (elbow) is healthy. Strikeout machine Ernesto Frieri and lefty newcomer Sean Burnett provide excellent late-inning depth.

HITTING

Beyond the Angels' big three on offense, second baseman Howard Kendrick and shortstop Erick Aybar could play major roles in 2013. Massive power hitter Mark Trumbo figures to do a lot of DHing this season, but is versatile enough to spell several regulars whenever needed. Overall, the Angels should score a lot of runs. It all starts at the top with super-catalyst Trout.

X-FACTOR

Speedy Peter Bourjos is one of the few players in baseball who can push Trout to an outfield corner. He's that good defensively and just as fast as the reigning AL Rookie of the Year. However, he must hit more in order to play regularly. If not, the Angels will turn to forgotten man Vernon Wells.

LOS ANGELES DODGERS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

If riches and excess are trademarks of the Hollywood scene, then these Los Angeles Dodgers will blend right in with the crowd this season. The Dodgers have a lot of players to choose from this spring, but will they be able to put a T-E-A-M together, and not just a collection of talent?

PITCHING

As many as eight quality starting pitching candidates will vie for a rotation spot on the Dodgers, but they'll be led by the lefty-righty combination of Clayton Kershaw and newcomer Zack Greinke. Beyond that, manager Don Mattingly has to choose from among Josh Beckett, Hyun-Jin Ryu, Chris Capuano, Aaron Harang, Chad Billingsley and Ted Lilly (the latter two are coming off injury). The bullpen is deep as well, with Brandon League, Kenley Jansen, Ronald Belisario, J.P. Howell and several others capable of pitching late in games.

HITTING

MVP candidates Matt Kemp (CF), Adrian Gonzalez (1B) and Hanley Ramirez (SS) lead the way here, but there isn't a quality leadoff option (since Dee Gordon lost his shortstop job) and questions linger at second and third base. Things would be helped greatly if corner outfielders Carl Crawford and Andre Ethier returned to past form.

X-FACTOR

The Dodgers have a massive payroll, but there aren't enough spots in the lineup to please everyone. Mattingly faces a daunting task to keep everybody on the roster happy. Is this group overflowing with talent or simply dysfunctional?

MIAMI MARLINS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

It's official: Giancarlo Stanton is the winner of "Survivor - Everglades". He alone remains from the stellar core of last year's would-be championship team, but a subsistence diet of breaking balls and intentional walks is scant reward for being the 'last man standing'.

PITCHING

The mega-trade with Toronto restores holdover Ricky Nolasco as, ahem, head of the rotation. Henderson Alvarez had some fine moments as a Blue Jay but lacks a true starter's arsenal. Young right-handers Jacob Turner and Nathan Eovaldi could make nice top-of-the-rotation bookends one day, just not today. The fifth starter may be a lefty: either veteran Wade LeBlanc or Brad Hand. If they ever actually take a lead into the ninth inning, Steve Cishek proved last year that he can close the deal, converting 14 of 15 save chances after the All-Star break. Big and lanky Jon Rauch is a credible addition in the setup role.

HITTING

Stanton is the one marketable face in the lineup, post-purge. There is a home run title in his future but perhaps not in South Florida, where he is naked in the order. Instead of Hanley Ramirez and Jose Reyes, his table-setters this year may be outfielder Juan Pierre and infielder Placido Polanco. Prospects worth watching include rookie catcher Rob Brantly, a .290 hitter after a late-season call-up, and shortstop Adeiny Hechavarria, coming off a strong debut in Toronto.

X-FACTOR

Could it get any worse? Yes, if Stanton is traded.

MILWAUKEE BREWERS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

Winning at home was easy last year, it was the road that killed Milwaukee. The league's best offense scored almost 100 fewer runs and was 13 games below .500 away from sudsy Miller Park.

PITCHING

Manager Ron Roenicke has a handful of candidates for three vacancies in the starting rotation. After the big two of Yovani Gallardo and Marco Estrada jobs are for the taking and the rotation could be fluid all season. Pencil in Mike Fiers for one spot and hope that Chris Narveson can rebound from rotator cuff surgery. We're guessing that John Axford doesn't blow nine saves again and reclaims his status as one of the game's most dependable closers.

HITTING

The Brewers boasted the best balance of speed and power in all of baseball last year, first in the NL in Runs, HR's AND SB's. They owed that rare feat in large part to the offensive machine in left field. Ryan Braun enjoyed his second straight 30-30 season and is young enough at 29 to do it again. Norichika Aoki was terrific in his first season in the leadoff spot, and who knew that ex-Cub Aramis Ramirez would love cheese so much, going off for 80 extra-base hits including 50 doubles. Corey Hart (knee) should be ready by June.

X-FACTOR

The baseball truism that good pitching trumps good hitting was borne out again in Milwaukee. The Brew Crew finished a distant third in the NL Central last season in spite of the league's best offense so it's all on the pitching if this team intends to move up.

MINNESOTA TWINS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

Do the Twins have enough talent to realistically compete in the high-powered American League? On paper it seems doubtful, especially since they did little to improve over the winter. Still, a healthy Justin Morneau could make a difference.

PITCHING

The staff has a new top starter in Vance Worley (picked up from Philadelphia in the Ben Revere deal), but it's hard to call him an ace. Meanwhile, improving lefty Scott Diamond starts the season dealing with elbow issues. The rest of the likely starters are middling vets (Kevin Correia, Mike Pelfrey and Cole De Vries) and/or unproven youngsters (Kyle Gibson and Liam Hendriks). Underrated duo Glen Perkins and Jared Burton hold down the bullpen.

HITTING

When healthy, the heart of the Twins order is impressive: all-world catcher Joe Mauer, power-hitting left-fielder Josh Willingham and former AL MVP Justin Morneau. All reports suggest Morneau is finally healthy and set for a bounce-back campaign, so Minny at least boasts power. The rest of the lineup, however, is riddled with journeymen (Jamey Carroll and Ryan Doumit), unproven players (Trevor Plouffe, Darin Mastroianni and Pedro Florimon), and not-quite-developed prospects (Chris Parmelee and Aaron Hicks).

X-FACTOR

First baseman Morneau can carry a team and make it better than the sum of its parts, and he's entering a contract year. The Twins desperately need him to be the Morneau of old.

NEW YORK METS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

Now there's a plan: trade a Cy Young winner for prospects and re-sign your franchise third baseman to a new long-term contract. The Mets appear to be treading water until help arrives from the minors. This is not how New Yorkers like to roll.

PITCHING

Here's trouble. We're half-waiting for omnipresent NYC Mayor Michael Bloomberg to declare the loss of R.A. Dickey a civil emergency. Minus the knuckleballer, Johan Santana gets to write 'ace' inside his cap, though fellow lefty Jonathon Niese could push for that title by year's end. Youngster Matt Harvey, newcomer Shawn Marcum and (eventually) Dillon Gee (blood clot) should complete the rotation. Bobby Parnell may open as the closer instead of Frank Francisco (bone spur). The middle innings are a shambles.

HITTING

The job here is to supply third baseman David Wright with RBI chances. Young short-stop Ruben Tejada could be the answer at leadoff, but this is a station-to-station lineup. Only the Pirates stole fewer bases in the NL last season and that was before unsigned outfielder Andres Torres (13 SB's) left. Daniel Murphy looks perfect for the two-hole; left-fielder Lucas Duda and first baseman Ike Davis offer legit power behind Wright and a bevy of outfield candidates makes for a fluid batting order. John Buck will catch until Travis d'Arnaud is ready.

X-FACTOR

The proceeds of the Dickey trade offer the best hope for long-run success. Wright place, wrong time.

NEW YORK YANKEES

AMERICAN LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

Are the Bronx Bombers set to bomb in the Big Apple? They still have a mega-payroll loaded with mega-stars, but many of those stars may be well past their primes. Is there anywhere for them to go but down in the tough AL East?

PITCHING

Longtime Cy Young contender CC Sabathia dipped to just 15 wins last season, partly due to uncommon (for him) minor injuries. He's still the ace, but is fatigue creeping in? Hiroki Kuroda is superb, but at 38 how much is left? The same goes for Andy Pettitte, 40, so younger rotation options Phil Hughes, Ivan Nova and David Phelps must step up. Meanwhile superstar stopper Mariano Rivera, 43, is back from his torn ACL and joined by underrated K-man David Robertson on late-inning duties.

HITTING

Nick Swisher is gone but Kevin Youkilis (3B) and Travis Hafner (DH) have arrived, so the offense is still potent. It's also a year older: Derek Jeter is 38, Mark Teixeira is 32 and declining, Ichiro Suzuki is 39 and, if Alex Rodriguez plays at all in 2013 (he's rehabbing his hip), he's closing in on 38. Youkilis turns 34 in March, Hafner is 35 and even Robinson Cano (30) and now-injured Curtis Granderson (32 in March) are aging.

X-FACTOR

Sabathia has pitched at least 200 innings in each of the past six seasons, and that workload eventually takes its toll. Last season he showed rare signs of wear and tear, and if he doesn't stay healthy a team implosion could follow.

OAKLAND ATHLETICS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

For years, the A's were anything but athletic. Mammoth power hitters with questionable gloves and designated hitter profiles used to dominate Oakland's lineup. Times have changed. These days, the Athletics are just that, plus they're also deep and versatile. Oh, and they can pitch too.

PITCHING

The pitching was a huge story in Oakland's 2012 division title run, and most of the main protagonists remain. Only Brandon McCarthy (Arizona) is gone from the rotation, while veteran Bartolo Colon (suspension) won't start the season with everybody else. That said, the staff will continue to get better as long as Jarrod Parker, Brett Anderson, Tommy Milone, A.J. Griffin and Dan Straily continue a normal development curve. The bullpen is also fairly deep, though a little inconsistent.

HITTING

The A's have a solid backup plan at every position heading into 2013, which is the type of depth winning ball clubs need. Projected left-fielder Yoenis Cespedes is the rising star here, and he should feel more comfortable with a big-league season under his belt. Another International signing, Japanese shortstop Hiroyuki Nakajima is intriguing, while the plan for newcomer Jed Lowrie is to play every day but all over the infield.

X-FACTOR

By now, even non-sports fans know all about GM Billy Beane, thanks to the motion picture 'Moneyball'. He is the epitome of the term 'X-factor'. As long as Beane is in Oakland, the club will be pointed in the right direction.

PHILADELPHIA PHILLIES

NATIONAL LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

The Phillies are burdened with age and big contracts. As they like to say in the investment racket, past performance is no guarantee of future returns.

PITCHING

Roy Halladay says he's ready to go and we take him at his word, but last year's shoulder breakdown was a red flag. The rotation is solid and experienced with Cole Hamels, Cliff Lee and Kyle Kendrick in the top four. Lefty John Lannan arrives from Washington with something to prove and club is counting on him. The Phils hope prospect Tyler Cloyd is as good as his eye-popping minor-league stats suggest. Closer Jonathan Papelbon made a seamless transfer from the AL but his mates in the bullpen blew 15 saves. New-comer Mike Adams, left-hander Antonio Bastardo and young righty Phillippe Aumont must do better in the setup role.

HITTING

The names are more impressive than the numbers. There's no denying the accomplishments of Chase Utley, Ryan Howard, Michael Young and Jimmy Rollins, all well respected but also past their best years. So it's good that a revamped outfield of Ben Revere, Delmon Young and Domonic Brown (or John Mayberry) injects youth and talent to offset the decay. Revere and Rollins may wreak havoc at the top of the order. Top minor-league prospect Darin Ruf has big power and should arrive by June or sooner, especially if the corner outfielders struggle.

X-FACTOR

Aging stars must recover past form or we could see a mid-season sell-off in Philly.

PITTSBURGH PIRATES

NATIONAL LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The Jolly Roger was flying high over PA in August but then the Bucs were broadsided by a 9-22 finish last season. Perhaps they just weren't as good as they thought they were. To sink below .500 was a huge disappointment.

PITCHING

A.J. Burnett kept his temper under wraps and produced one of his best seasons at age 35. It's a lot to ask for a repeat but the Pirates need him to be that good again. Wandy Rodriguez saw a further decline in his strikeout rate and James McDonald went from good to terrible and had to be yanked from the rotation. There is little depth behind the veterans. Jason Grilli assumes the closer role after a long career in middle relief/setup roles. The battle for bullpen jobs is wide open this spring and there is room for the kids to step up.

HITTING

The Pirates' power-laden nucleus is led by NL MVP candidate Andrew McCutchen, third baseman Pedro Alvarez and the versatile Garrett Jones. The key will be to find competent table-setters. The leadoff battle between Starling Marte and Jose Tabata could endure all year until one of them establishes consistency. Neil Walker's health will be critical; his bat was on fire during the club's mid-season surge and sorely missed in September when his back went out.

X-FACTOR

Offense is the strength of this team, which is to say that another sub-.500 season beckons unless the pitching staff exceeds expectations. That burden partly falls on new catcher Russell Martin.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - CENTRAL DIVISION

The best-run organization in baseball (arguably) is wisely managing the transition to a more youthful lineup without sacrificing its competitive edge. Even the loss of Chris Carpenter (shoulder) won't deter this group from another strong title run.

PITCHING

Sadly, Carpenter may not pitch at all this year, depriving the rotation of its veteran anchor. Rather than lament his loss, celebrate the arrival of Lance Lynn and rookie Shelby Miller as current and future stars. Adam Wainwright is another year removed from arm surgery; Jaime Garcia and Jake Westbrook round out the top four. Miller is potential ROY material with a good chance to be the fifth man. Jason Motte is an elite closer, while setup man Trevor Rosenthal may be the next big thing out of the 'pen.

HITTING

The Cards' rich farm system has quietly delivered a fresh slew of quality bats since 2011; David Freese, Allen Craig, Matt Carpenter and Jon Jay are solid players and fine complements to veterans Matt Holliday and Carlos Beltran. The addition of Beltran offset the departure of Albert Pujols a year ago and catcher Yadier Molina is the below-the-radar team MVP. A healthy and productive Rafael Furcal would be a bonus.

X-FACTOR

St. Louis will contend for sure but overtaking the likes of Cincinnati, San Francisco and Atlanta will require another big year from Beltran and a breakout season by Miller to shore up the rotation.

SAN DIEGO PADRES

NATIONAL LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

The Padres offense may no longer get fenced in moving forward, as the team decided to alter the dimensions at PETCO Park to more hitter-friendly standards for the 2013 campaign. Will it help the San Diego batters more than it hurts the pitchers?

PITCHING

With everybody healthy, the Padres have the makings of a very solid rotation. However, left-hander Cory Luebke (Tommy John surgery) won't be available until mid-season, and right-hander Andrew Cashner (thumb) is questionable for Opening Day. Even prospect Joe Wieland (Tommy John surgery) may have added solid depth but he too won't be a factor until the second half. Therefore, expect early-season struggles for San Diego starting pitching. Fortunately, Huston Street, Luke Gregerson and Tom Layne provide great late-inning relief.

HITTING

The new park dimensions should be great news for slugger Carlos Quentin, San Diego's best hitter. It'll also help third baseman Chase Headley, who otherwise would be hard-pressed to repeat his 2012 breakout numbers. First baseman Yonder Alonso and center-fielder Cameron Maybin should also benefit from the decision to move the fences in.

X-FACTOR

The key for San Diego's playoff chances in 2013 is to not fall behind too much early on, since they should get a big boost with the return of Luebke to the rotation and catcher Yasmani Grandal (50-game suspension for testing positive for PED's) for the offense. Staying afloat without them will be difficult, however.

SAN FRANCISCO GIANTS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

After two World Series titles in three years, San Francisco's expectations these days are truly giant. Their pitching staff is as good as anyone's, and catcher Buster Posey's emergence as a perennial MVP candidate helps mask some of the Giants' offensive shortcomings.

PITCHING

Few teams can match San Francisco's starting five of Matt Cain, Madison Bumgarner, Tim Lincecum, Ryan Vogelsong and Barry Zito. They have it all: workhorse innings-eating ability, promising upside, strikeouts galore, pitching savvy and veteran big-game experience. The bullpen is almost as impressive, led by new closer Sergio Romo, Santiago Casilla, Jeremy Affeldt, Javier Lopez and George Kontos. They're so good that they let closer Brian Wilson go in the off-season.

HITTING

Posey is the lynchpin on offense, and the Giants make sure to get his bat in the lineup as often as possible (he sees time at first base, too). The Giants won the World Series without suspended left-fielder Melky Cabrera (now with Toronto) in 2012, but it remains to be seen whether Gregor Blanco and Andres Torres can get the job done. Hunter Pence is good lineup protection for Posey.

X-FACTOR

First baseman Brandon Belt is still only 24 years old, so he is primed for a breakout campaign. He needs to show something early, because Giants manager Bruce Bochy likes to keep Posey fresh by using him a lot at first base. It's up to Belt to force his manager's hand.

SEATTLE MARINERS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

Like San Diego in the National League, the Mariners have decided to bring the fences in to help the offense. However, Seattle went even further in their pursuit of better production: they added a few big bats with the hope they can finally get over the hump at the dish. Did they do enough?

PITCHING

The face of the Mariners franchise is staff ace Felix Hernandez, and he'll be around for a while (after signing a contract extension through 2019 in the off-season). Eventually, lefty Danny Hultzen and right-hander Taijuan Walker will join 'King Felix' to form a potentially dominant rotation, but Hultzen and Walker may need a little more seasoning. For now, veterans and journeymen will follow Hernandez. The bullpen has a lot of strikeout potential, but not much experience.

HITTING

Proven RBI men Kendrys Morales, formerly of the Angels, and Michael Morse (formerly of the Nationals) were brought in to help a starving offense. Veterans Raul Ibanez and Jason Bay may also help. If the M's are to move up the West Division standings, they'll need to vastly improve their run production. For now, the lineup appears to lack a true leadoff man and overall stability.

X-FACTOR

How many lives does first baseman Justin Smoak have left? Despite the arrival of Morales, Seattle manager Eric Wedge wants Smoak to play regularly at first (with Morales mostly DHing). That said, Wedge has options that he didn't have before, so Smoak needs to get out of the gate quickly in 2013.

TAMPA BAY RAYS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

Will the Rays' promising hitting catch up to their fantastic pitching and make them a true title-tier team? There are a handful of new bats, but this squad needs its young hitters to keep improving.

PITCHING

Even with the excellent James Shields traded to KC this past winter, Tampa boasts a highly talented young starting staff. Reigning AL Cy Young winner David Price is the star, but young Matt Moore may be ready to push him after a dazzling 2012 second half. Jeremy Hellickson adds finesse and Jeff Niemann is an underrated vet. Moreover, youngsters Alex Cobb, Chris Archer and Jake Odorizzi have major upside. The reborn Fernando Rodney and rising star Jake McGee highlight a diverse bullpen.

HITTING

Despite the cagey mixing and matching of brilliant manager Joe Maddon, Tampa's batting order wasn't great last season. Much of that was because lineup fulcrum Evan Longoria played just 74 games, so they'll improve with him healthy. The team should see a breakout from leadoff man Desmond Jennings, and the likes of Ben Zobrist, Matt Joyce and Luke Scott are solid. Still, the bottom of the order (James Loney, Yunel Escobar, Kelly Johnson et al) has much to prove.

X-FACTOR

Outfielder Wil Myers was picked up from the Royals in the Shields deal, and if he can push his way into the lineup the Rays may be hard to stop. By many accounts the top hitting prospect in baseball, Myers is one to watch.

TEXAS RANGERS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - WEST DIVISION

Life after Josh Hamilton figures to be a challenge for the Rangers in 2013, but it's not like Ron Washington's club is foreign to the concept of adversity. These Rangers seem to have more holes than the 2010 and 2011 versions that reached the World Series in back-to-back years.

PITCHING

Not surprisingly, Nolan Ryan's team is emphasizing pitching more than ever before. The rotation figures to be a team strength, especially if Alexi Ogando makes a smooth conversion from the bullpen and Colby Lewis and Neftali Feliz return to full strength from elbow injuries. The bullpen is anchored by veteran Joe Nathan, while former Royals closer Joakim Soria (elbow) was added to provide quality depth...eventually.

HITTING

With Hamilton gone, everybody in the Texas lineup must provide a little more. Veteran Michael Young and catcher Mike Napoli are also gone, so the power needs to come from third baseman Adrian Beltre, outfielder Nelson Cruz and second baseman Ian Kinsler. David Murphy will now be counted on to play regularly in the outfield, after serving as a part-time player during Hamilton's reign. He is another key ingredient.

X-FACTOR

The Rangers signed veteran catcher A.J. Pierzynski to be the primary catcher this season. He's a bit of a controversial character but does a good job leading a pitching staff. Geovany Soto should again serve as Yu Darvish's personal catcher, adding further depth behind the plate.

TORONTO BLUE JAYS

AMERICAN LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

In terms of pure talent the Blue Jays may now be tops in baseball. General manager Alex Anthopoulos did a great winter job of going all out to build a contender, but a key issue remains: how long will it all take to jell?

PITCHING

The fact that 2012 ace Ricky Romero is now the No. 5 starter says everything about this staff's overhaul. The Jays traded for reigning NL Cy Young winner R.A. Dickey, Marlins ace Josh Johnson and former All-Star Mark Buehrle. When power pitcher Brandon Morrow is added it becomes a potent mix. The bullpen is less stellar, but has several promising long men (including former starters J.A. Happ and Brett Cecil) and big-armed late-inning options (Sergio Santos, Casey Janssen and Steve Delabar).

HITTING

Adding star shortstop Jose Reyes and sweet-hitting left-fielder Melky Cabrera to the top of the Jays order gives the offense a great boost. It also takes pressure off young talents Brett Lawrie (3B) and Colby Rasmus (CF), while providing more RBI opportunities for sluggers Jose Bautista and Edwin Encarnacion. The bottom of the lineup is less stellar (J.P. Arencibia, Adam Lind and either Maicer Izturis or Emilio Bonifacio) but it's very strong overall.

X-FACTOR

Health and chemistry are critical for Toronto. Re-hired manager John Gibbons is fiery and has a history of clashes with players (so he must adapt) and the new coaching staff must keep the pitchers healthy.

WASHINGTON NATIONALS

NATIONAL LEAGUE - EAST DIVISION

Management stuck to its plan; protected Stephen Strasburg and added the missing pieces for a serious championship run. Manager Davey Johnson has a deep squad.

PITCHING

Never mind a 'Big Two' of Strasburg and Gio Gonzalez; it's easily a 'Big Five' including Jordan Zimmermann, Dan Haren and Ross Detwiler, with Haren replacing Edwin Jackson (Cubs). The depth and quality of the rotation is matched in the bullpen with new closer Rafael Soriano joining Drew Storen, Tyler Clippard, Henry Rodriguez and Craig Stammen. The staff with the best ERA in the NL last season should be favored to repeat, and remember this: Strasburg won't be shut down early this time and the outfield defense is better with the addition of Denard Span.

HITTING

The raw power of Michael Morse (Seattle) will be missed but the Nats needed a leadoff man and got one in Span. His speed at the top sets up a daunting and balanced order with Bryce Harper, Ryan Zimmerman, Adam LaRoche, Ian Desmond and Jayson Werth providing thump from both sides. Strongman Danny Espinosa reports a full recovery from a torn rotator cuff and could improve on his 17 HR's. Catcher Kurt Suzuki was reborn at the plate after the trade from Oakland, though he's in for a battle with Wilson Ramos (knee surgery).

X-FACTOR

The time for development is over. It's time to win in D.C. This long-suffering franchise needs to take the next step. Are they ready?
